Hill land south of Mokena and notified Mr. Hill to take care of same but he did not pay any attention to the notice. Then Commissioner Schultz hired a man and team and had the thistles cut and sent the bill to Mr. Hill but still no action was taken. Frankfort Jinx On Route 51

Frankfort has proved a jinx for route 51 ever since the route was first laid out at which time it had been planned to run the pavement thru the village, but so much opposition was encountered that the location of the pavement was relocated so as to miss the village entirely but here again the state has struck a snag. As subways would have to be built under the Michigan Central and J railroads it would mean that the first mentioned railroad would have to raise their tracks four feet in order to make the proper clearance for the subway. As the grade of the railroad is high at this point now, the railroad is refusing to raise the tracks. As a result the paving route 51 it is understood will only be laid up to the Michigan Central right of way and end there until such time as the subway is built. It will mean of course that this paving cannot be used by traffic until the subways are finished.

In order to get around the tangle the county bond issue road of one mile in length and which will run thru the village beginning at the Lincoln highway, will be built this summer and when completed will be used as the connecting link for route 51. The right of way for the mile stretch of paving under the county bond issue has been secured it is said and bids for its construction are to be received soon.

This car was ditched and Boeyer's car running off the pavement crashed into the front porch of the residence occupied by C. A. Steinhagen tearing away part of the porch. Orland Park Observes Flag Day

The 152nd anniversary of the birth of the American Flag was celebrated at Orland Park by the P. T. A. The 66 foot flag pole which had been presented to the school by the Orland Lions Club, the beautiful national emblem which had been donated by Mr. and Mrs. Harold Kinney and had been dedicated with appropriate ceremonies by Commander Frank Hoar and his Legionnaires of Tinley Park Post, arrived at a most opportune time.

Midlothian was the scene of a fatal auto accident Sunday when an automobile with four persons in it drove directly in front of a fast passenger train on the Rock Island at the Crawford Avenue crossing.

The dead are: Delno Allie, 40, of 4502 S. Kedzie av., a teamster, owner of a motor car for less than a month, and the driver of the machine.

Mrs. Ella Allie, 64, of 314 W. Sixtieth place, his mother, who was being driven to her home by her son after a visit in Rockford.

William Byrne, 6401 S. Bishop st. a carpenter and son-in-law of Mrs. Allie.

Probably fatally injured, in the Oak Forest infirmary, is Mrs. Alfrida Allie, 24, wife of the driver and mother of seven children.

An aged spectator, realizing the danger to the oncoming motorists from the train, tried to warn them by shouts and waving of his arms, but the driver, either confused or refusing to accept the warning, drove on at an even speed of 25 miles an hour, directly onto the track.

The first bump knocked his car 20 feet down the track where the pilot picked it up and carried it another 1,000 feet. When rescuers and the train crew reached the car the three were dead and the younger Mrs. Allie unconscious.

Charles Haeppler, the engineer, said that a brick building directly in the line of sight at 148th st. and Crawford av. blocked his view of the oncoming car. He was allowed to continue his run to Peoria, but was to be back today for the inquest.

This accident was similar to the one which occurred on the route 51 crossing east of Mokena a few weeks ago when a large touring car containing five passengers drove in front of a fast passenger train and five persons were instantly killed and the engine derailed.

Watch, look and listen when crossing a railroad. Be cautious. These accidents should be lessons.

Still a Need for a "Safe and Sane Fourth"

All Photos by International

By ELMO SCOTT WATSON

DESPITE the determined effort that has been made in recent years to reduce the number of casualties which seem to be an inevitable part of our celebration of Independence Day, despite all the warnings and cautions that are issued by the authorities before that day each year, despite the constantly increasing prohibitions on the use of explosives, the fact remains that America is still a long way from a "safe and sane Fourth," concerning which we have been hearing so much in recent years.

Did you know that more people have been killed celebrating American Independence than were in acquiring it?

Did you know that Fourth of July celebrations in the last four years have taken a heavier toll of American lives than did thirteen of the most important battles of the war in which our independence was won?

Perhaps you did not, but here is the bitter history of Independence Day celebrations which annually takes the lives of both children and grown-ups—mostly children—blinds them, maims them, or inflicts upon them dreadful burns. In 1925 a total of 250 deaths resulted from Fourth of July celebrations. In 1926, 70 died; in 1927, 30 went to their deaths while celebrating our nation's birthday and last year the Independence Day toll of death was 209.

Official records of the Revolution show that 7 Americans were killed at the battle of Lexington; 49 at Concord; 31 at Princeton; 12 at Cowpens; 92 at the siege of Charleston; 145 at Bunker Hill; 11 at Ft. Mifflin; 72 at Monmouth; 51 at Stone Ferry; 20 at Stony Point; 30 at Bennington; 32 at Saratoga and 2 at Trenton. That is a total of 554 Americans who gave their lives in winning American liberty. From 1925 to 1928 some 559 Americans gave their lives, uselessly, in "celebrating" the winning of that liberty.

Take two Fourth of July celebrations at random and the records show that during one of them, 22 were killed and 437 were injured. For the other the casualty list read 135 dead, and 80 injured. The total for these two celebrations is 159 killed and 517 injured. Add to this the casualty list for any Fourth of July celebration since 1900 (about the time when this "safe and sane Fourth" agitation started) and the total will be greater than the losses suffered by the Continental army when it was defeated at the battle of Germantown or during the siege of Yorktown which ended successfully the American struggle for liberty. The sufferings of the Continentals during the terrible winter at Valley Forge have become traditional. Yet, since 1925, more Americans have lost their lives during Fourth of July celebrations than were lost among the soldiery who shivered in the cold on those bleak Pennsylvania hillsides.

Estimates based on government records show that there were 4,044 killed and 6,044 wounded during the six years of the Revolution, when there was scarcely a day in which there was not fighting of some character going on somewhere in the land. In comparison with that record, look at the figures compiled by the American Medical association and the American Museum of Safety in regard to Fourth of July celebration casualties. During the last 30 years—and that means 30 Independence days—there were 4,290 Americans killed in fireworks accidents and 96,000 injured. How lucky it was for our nation that George Washington's Continental army merely had to fight for American Independence! If that army had had to celebrate the winning of independence, according to our modern methods, it would have been wiped out of existence in a very short time indeed.

Now, these figures quoted above are for fireworks accidents alone and do not include the many deaths occurring after July 4 as a direct result of fireworks accidents or drownings and deaths from accidents to motor cars.

From 1903 to 1915 the American Medical association compiled statistics of Independence day fireworks casualties and found 1,862 deaths and 42,089 injuries were attributable definitely to fireworks. It was an average of 143 deaths and 3,237 injuries each year. In the celebration in 1909 of the "Glorious Fourth," 215 persons were killed and 5,000 injured. The fire loss that day was $1,000,000.

Last year the National Museum of Safety ordered newspaper reports of fireworks casualties from all parts of the country for June and July. The result:

Killed	161
Injured	2,205

Included in the list of dead were 52 children less than five years old; 54 persons burned to death by fireworks or bonfires; 20 children burned to death by "harmless" sparklers, and 21 children died from eating fireworks. "Unloaded guns" or stray bullets injured 32 persons last year; 30 persons lost one or both eyes, and 300 persons suffered injuries to their eyes.

Recently the country was horrified at the casualty list of 125 in an explosion in a hospital in Cleveland, Ohio. It has also been horrified from time to time when a fire in a school, a tornado, or a flood snuffs out from 100 to 150 lives. Yet it seems strangely unconcerned that every year more than a 100 persons die and more than 3,000 are seriously injured in celebrating the "glorious Fourth." Fireworks are generally held responsible for the appalling death list while as a matter of fact, firecrackers, salutes, pinwheels, bombs and skyrockets account for not more than 5 per cent of the Independence Day casualties. Nor have all of the deaths been due to the explosions of these fireworks. Many of them result when sufficient care is not taken to keep fireworks from the smaller children. Many children have died from eating poisonous powder pellets, such as are used in dynamite canes. Even the so-called "safety" sparklers have proved fatal to youngsters who have eaten them, believing that they were candy.

But aside from the dangers of celebrating the Fourth there are other reasons why this is an occasion for a high mortality rate. The Fourth of July is the one national holiday in the year when the entire population drops all its work-day cares to swarm to the beaches, the mountains and other places of recreation. The result is an appalling number of drownings and deaths in automobile accidents which far exceeds the number recorded on any other day in the year. So it is apparent that although a great deal of good has been accomplished by those organizations which have sponsored this "safe and sane Fourth" idea and which calls upon every American to assume the responsibility of being a "safety engineer" on July 4, there is still much to be done in making the celebration of this day more in keeping with the spirit of the occasion. One hopeful sign lies in the fact that recreation is displacing fireworks to a certain extent. For the character of Fourth of July celebrations is changing, and for the better, according to a survey recently made by the Playground and Recreation Association of America. Without losing sight of the small boy and his zest for "a good show" on this holiday the association has sent out suggestions for what it calls constructive community programs which have been tried and approved by various cities and towns during recent years.

Substantial progress has been shown, according to this survey, in changing the former flamboyant Independence Day demonstration into occasions that, in some degree at least, interpret the local, state and national events from the standpoint of history and citizenship.

The Parent-Teachers' association has recommended a rural program as follows:

At 8:30 o'clock in the morning a band drawn on a truck moves throughout each neighborhood in town. A man with a megaphone calls out that games will begin at the school playground at 10:30 o'clock. These games are followed by a parade to picnic grounds, where there is a program of community singing and a speaker. A two-hour luncheon period follows. Then there are contests, baseball and story telling for children, followed by a patriotic pageant, the celebration concluding with a block dance.

The Playground and Recreation Association of America has emphasized that the paramount opportunities of community celebrations of the Fourth of July are:

"To recall with pride and reverence the courage, sacrifice and vision of the founders of American independence; to re-emphasize the principles of justice, democracy and tolerance upon which this government was founded and to encourage their continuance in the present and future; through appropriate ceremonies to dramatize the entrance into citizenship of native-born, who have recently come of age and of the foreign born who have just been naturalized; through games, sports, picnics, pageantry, festivals and other spectacles, through music and brief addresses, to bring neighborhoods and communities together in unified programs of recreation and entertainment suitable to the day; to promote safety, especially among children, by substituting wholesome and harmless recreation for the use of dangerous fireworks."

Is there still a need for a "safe and sane Fourth"? Let the following Associated Press dispatch, dated July 5 of last year, answer that question:

The lives of 205 men, women and children were a nation's sacrifice to the celebration of its 152nd birthday anniversary yesterday.

Fireworks claimed their share of victims, as they always have since the United States first began observing Independence day with skyrocket, pinwheel and cannon cracker. There were eleven such deaths in the entire country, according to the Associated Press tabulation.

Lakes and rivers, however, exacted the heaviest tribute of human life on the holiday, 106 drownings being reported. Motor car deaths ranked next in number with 54. Heat took 12 lives and lightning 3, while 4 were killed in plane crashes. In addition there were 15 deaths attributed to other causes directly connected with America's observance of the Fourth.

Two densely populated areas—the middle Atlantic states and the midwest—had more than half the country's total deaths for the day. In the former there were 63 fatalities, which was 5 more than occurred in the midwest.

The mountain states and the northwest had the best sectional records, with five deaths in each division. Everywhere through the midwest the temperature was high, contributing both to deaths by heat and by drowning. The midwest led the country in the number of drownings with 38, although the middle Atlantic area had only two fewer. The airplane accidents were at Joliet, Ill., where a pilot and two passengers plunged to death when the wing of their plane snapped, and at Beaumont, Tex., where one was killed.

Three of the motor car deaths came in races, drivers being killed in Oregon, Pennsylvania and Wisconsin.

The number of persons injured, many probably fatally, ran into the thousands. Premature explosion of a truckload of fireworks at Lamar, Mo., injured 25 persons as 5,000 gathered in the public square to witness the display. In the larger cities the hospital list of persons injured in observance of the day ran into the hundreds.

Chicago, with an ordinance prohibiting the sale of fireworks, echoed all day with firecracker explosions and reports from police and hospitals indicated the number injured was probably greater than in recent years.

Lesson for June 23

A PSALM OF PRAISE

LESSON TEXT—Psalm 103:1-22. GOLDEN TEXT—Bless the Lord, O my soul.

PRIMARY TOPIC—A Song of Praise. JUNIOR TOPIC—A Song of Praise. INTERMEDIATE AND SENIOR TOPIC—The Privilege of Worshipping God. YOUNG PEOPLE AND ADULT TOPIC—The Habit of Thankfulness.

This beautiful psalm of praise follows one of the importunate pleadings for help in time of great need. Andrew Bonar calls it "A Song of a Redeemed One by the Redeemer's Side." It is entirely given up to praise; not a single supplication being found in it.

I. Adoration for Personal Benefits (vv. 1-5).

The Psalmist calls upon his soul to bless God's holy name. Man's whole nature, intellectually and spiritually, is called upon to adore God. Note the benefits recognized by the Psalmist:

1. "Forgiveth all thine iniquities" (v. 3) Pardon of our sins is the most important of all God's benefits.

2. "Healeth all thy diseases" (v. 3). Healing here refers to that of the body and the soul. Renovation of the entire nature, especially the moral, follows forgiveness of sins.

3. "Redeemeth thy life from destruction" (v. 4). The sinner is in the position of a debtor. All the demands made against him because of his sins, were paid by Jesus Christ.

4. "Crowne thee with lovingkindness" (v. 4). The redeemed one not only has forgiveness of sins, but is invested with the full rights of heavenly citizenship.

5. "Satisfieth thy mouth" (v. 5). When one enters into saving relationship with Christ he does not incur loss, but great gain. He is not deprived of any rights.

II. Praise for God's Excellencies (vv. 6-13).

The Psalmist now looks away from the benefits bestowed to the very quality of the being who bestowed them.

1. His justice (v. 6).

"He executeth righteousness," God is always against the oppressor and on the side of the oppressed. This points to the time when Messiah's reign shall extend over the whole world.

2. He reveals Himself (v. 7). This He did in a peculiar way to Moses and the children of Israel. The very name Jehovah means Self-revealing One (Ex. 3:14). God created man in His likeness and image in order that He might not only reveal Himself, but that He might share His goodness with the creature.

3. Merciful and gracious (v. 8). As a sinner man needs pardon and favor, God in His mercy pardons the sinner who calls upon Him and through His grace He bestows favors upon him.

4. Not always contending (v. 9). God's love for His children moves Him to contend with them. When they turn from their sin, He ceases to chasten them. God holds no grudges. He forgets our stubborn follies as soon as we turn from them.

5. God's forgiveness (vv. 10-13).

This forgiveness is manifested in His not dealing with us according to our sins, in showing supreme mercy, in putting away sin as far as the East is from the West, and in fatherly pity. We usually think to praise God for what He has done. How much we ought to praise Him for what He has refrained from doing.

III. Man's Frailty and God's Eternity (vv. 14-19).

1. His frailty (vv. 14-16).

(1) He is but dust (v. 14). God constituted man's body out of the dust of the ground, therefore He knows his frailty. (2) His days are as grass (v. 15). He flourishes as the flower of the field. As the grass disappears under a blighting wind (v. 16), so a small blast from God will destroy man's life.

2. God's eternity (vv. 17-19). God's goodness and mercy are from everlasting to everlasting. This goodness and mercy He shows from generation to generation.

IV. Call to Universal Thanksgiving (vv. 20-22).

Since His dominion is over all, it calls for recognition by all.

1. Angels (v. 20). Intelligent spirits that bear His messages and go on His errands are called upon to praise and adore Him.

2. His hosts (v. 21). By hosts here is likely meant the sun, moon and stars. They are called upon to give Him due praise (Ps. 19:1).

3. His works (v. 22).

Whatever He has done, whether in creation, providence or redemption, His works made known his goodness.

Belief and Faith

And Jesus answering saith unto them, Have faith in God, For verily I say unto you, That whosoever shall say unto this mountain, Be thou removed, and be thou cast into the sea; and shall not doubt in his heart, but shall believe that those things which he saith shall come to pass; he shall have whatsoever he saith. Therefore I say unto you, What things soever ye desire, when ye pray, believe that ye receive them, and ye shall have them. —Mark 11:22 to 24.

When Food Sours

Lots of folks who think they have "indigestion" have only an acid condition which could be corrected in five or ten minutes. An effective anti-acid like Phillips Milk of Magnesia soon restores digestion to normal.

Phillips does away with all that sourness and gas right after meals. It prevents the distress so apt to occur two hours after eating. What a pleasant preparation to take! And how good it is for the system! Unlike a burning dose of soda—which is but temporary relief at best—Phillips Milk of Magnesia neutralizes many times its volume in acid.

Next time a hearty meal, or too rich a diet has brought on the least discomfort, try—

Excellent Reason for

Welcoming New Baby

Everyone had a good laugh during tea at Annandale the other day when a socially prominent young matron made her first appearance since the advent of the family son and heir. She brought her five-year-old daughter.

Conversation naturally turned to the new baby and finally some one said to the little girl:

"And what do you think of your little baby brother?"

To which sophisticated Young America promptly replied:

"I'm glad it was a boy 'cause daddy was getting sort of sissified with just mother and me around."—Los Angeles Times.

A Warning

Elmer Glyn said at a Hollywood tea:

"Daring dress isn't necessarily the most becoming. A wife said to her husband one day:

"John, what would people say if I went to the mask ball as a ballet dancer in tights?"

"They'd probably say," John answered, "that I married you for your money."

Super-quality makes Tanglefoot a super-spray. It kills insects wholesale and destroys the unhatched eggs of moths, fleas and bedbugs. No fly escapes. Mosquitoes "burn up". Say "Tanglefoot" for highest quality. Prices greatly reduced. Pay less and get the best.

For flies only, Tanglefoot Fly Paper and Fly Ribbons are the most sanitary and economical destroyers.

TANGLEFOOT SPRAY

Chairman R. J. Branson, of the house committee to investigate the employment of legislators, other state officers and employees by local governmental subdivisions, has found this one of the busiest of the three regular sessions in which he has served. The investigation has taken so much of his spare time that he has not introduced any bills in his own name, though doing much toward furthering the passage of many of which he was not personally the sponsor. He has served as a member of the Republican steering committee in addition to six regular committees.

Senator Florence Fifer Bohrer, Bloomington, introduced a senate joint resolution which provides for the appointment of a committee by the governor to study the child welfare legislation of Illinois and its operation, with a view of revising or codifying the same. The senate concurred in this resolution.

The fifty-sixth general assembly has adjourned but several officers are still at work cleaning up odds and ends. Representative Harry Baxter, Newman, who was chairman of the contingent expense committee, is still on the job. He has a force of men placing desks, chairs, lamps and other equipment in storage until the next session of the legislature. The equipment is placed in the custody of Secretary of State William J. Stratton. Mr. Baxter has devised a bookkeeping system showing the disposition of all supplies issued and each committee has been charged with whatever they used. All items on hand at the end of the session have been returned for credit. This committee purchased everything used by the house and has maintained a very busy office.

Representative Charles Wood, Keenes, who has just served for the eighth time at a regular session of the legislature as a member from the forty-sixth district, holds the distinction of having been the pastor for 21 years of the Christian church at Little Prairie. The church was founded over 100 years ago by Governor Emmerson's grandfather, who was pastor for a time. Reverend Wood introduced a bill providing that the Bible shall be read in every public school at the opening of school; but the bill was tabled. He secured the passage of H. B. 735, appropriating money for the refund to the city of Mt. Vernon of one-half of the cost of reconstruction of paving along the east side of the appellate court building.

The senate has defeated the bill introduced by Representatives Thomas J. O'Grady, Chicago, and Charles H. Weber, Chicago, providing for the repeal of the search and seizure and prohibition laws. The vote was as follows: Aye—Abt, Adair, Boehm, Broderick, Carroll, Courtney, Denver, Finn, Haenisch, Huebsch, Hughes, Joyce, Leonardo, McDermott, Marks, Mendel, Michel, Roberts, Starr, Steinert and Woods. Nay—Bailey, Baker, Barbour, Barr, Bohrer, Boyd, Carlson, Cuthbertson, Dunlap, Felts, Flagg, Hamilton, Hanna, Jewell, Kessinger, Lantz, McCauley, Mason, Meents, Meyers, Miles, Mills, Paddock, Reynolds, Smith, Thompson and Wilson.

The state of New York is the only other state in the Union having a law similar to S. B. No. 505 which was passed by the house and sent to the governor for his signature. This bill was introduced by Senator Florence Fifer Bohrer, Bloomington, and provides that upon conviction, felons are given into the custody of the department of public welfare after the sentence has been imposed. The bill in no way mitigates the sentence of the offender but provides for an investigation and an examination of the offender's history and career, both social and individual, and of his mental, moral and physical characteristics. After examination the department of public welfare shall place the offender in a given class and he shall be sent to a penal institution where he may be given special training. The prisoners shall be divided into classes with respect to their relative intelligence and amenability to correction and the causes or mental traits to which their offenses may be attributed. The purpose of this bill is not to make life more pleasant for the convict but to protect society by fitting him for re-entering society because it must be remembered that all such men and women may sooner or later re-enter society.

The midsummer meeting of the board of directors and administrative committee of the Illinois Chamber of Commerce will be held at Rockford, Friday, June 28.

Eleven Illinois cities will construct public school buildings this summer that will cost an estimated $2,125,000.

Speaker of the House David E. Shanahan, Chicago, has rounded out a career that has been equalled by very few men in the United States. He has just completed his fifth term as presiding officer of the house. Democrats and Republicans alike are praising Speaker Shanahan for his fairness to both parties in the recent session. To him goes great credit which will reflect in the history of this state.

The fifty-sixth general assembly has adjourned, although members will return June 20 to consider communications from Governor Emmerson and adjourn sine die. More than 100 bills were passed in the last two days of the session. Governor Emmerson had about 50 bills in his possession when adjournment came and a large number were given him for consideration afterward. The governor will spend the intervening period in studying these and hearing arguments for and against the bills which have been passed.

Before the senate adjourned members decided to let the salary proposition alone and defeated the bill introduced by Representative Calvin T. Weeks, Chicago, which would have increased the pay of members from $3,500 to $5,000 a session.

In keeping with a policy announced some time ago, Director Rodney Brandon of the department of public welfare has begun the deportation of alien prisoners in the state penal and criminal insane hospitals. Governor Emmerson has approved 18 pardons, conditional upon the men being deported.

Coal miners of southern Illinois lost their battle in the house to abolish the "bug light." The contest on the bill was national in its scope. Thomas Edison was among those who urged its defeat on the ground that the electric lamp was used for safety in mines where there is much gas.

Four hundred and forty-one bills passed the house and the senate in the session which came to an end last week. Of this number 280 were house bills and 169 were from the senate. To date Governor Emmerson has vetoed only one bill.

An airplane trip over the middle western trunk lines of the inland waterway system, starting at St. Louis and going as far northwest as Yankton, S. D., has been planned by Congressman William E. Hull, Peoria. Congressman Hull is the leader of the middle western forces on the rivers and harbors committee of the house. His trip is the first step in the program of congressional leaders looking to the definite declaration of policy by congress at its winter session that the entire inland waterway system shall be completed within four years, and that money enough shall be appropriated to make this possible.

Representative Claude Rew, Harrisburg, offered a resolution for a state commission to make a study of the "bug light" bill, which was defeated.

Efforts are being made in Lincoln to trace the history of a walnut table back to November 4, 1857, when it is believed the piece of furniture was presented to Abraham Lincoln by "Uncle Billie" Miller, Springfield, as a gift on the fifteenth wedding anniversary of the Lincolns.

Representative F. W. Lewis, Robinson, offered a joint resolution taking to task the states of New York, Pennsylvania, Wisconsin and Minnesota for not taking a part in the water diversion suit at Washington. The resolution will be presented to the senate June 20.

Representative Ed P. Petri, Belleville, was in charge of the gavel for one and one-half hours just before the house adjourned recently. Representative Petri had two bills passed in the last session—one pertaining to county connecting roads and the other concerned with fire protection districts.

Discussion as to who is the youngest member of the house has brought forth another claimant for the honor; William E. Gilmore, Champaign, who is only thirty-two years of age, was born on March 2, 1897. The state constitution requires that a representative be at least twenty-one years of age, and a senator twenty-five.

Director Henry Kohn, of the state department of purchases and construction, who has been undergoing treatment at Mayo brothers' hospital, is improving in condition.

Epidemic meningitis in the state continues to prevail at a rate higher than has been experienced before in more than a decade, according to Dr. Andy Hall, state health director.

The bill introduced by Representative Martin B. Lohmann, Pekin, providing for a $14,000,000 bond issue for conservation purposes has passed the senate.

Bituminous coal mines in the United States produced during the week ending May 18 nearly 10,000,000 tons of coal. Of that amount Illinois produced 900,000 tons. The Illinois Coal Sales association and the Illinois Chamber of Commerce are co-operating in every respect to influence residents of Illinois to "Buy Illinois Coal."

A resolution by Representative H. D. Sparks, Shelbyville, commending the record of President David Kinley, of the University of Illinois, who will probably retire from his present position soon, has been offered.

The house has adopted a resolution by Representative Homer J. Tice, Greenview, to allow the state department of public health to use several house committee rooms for offices between sessions of the legislature. Otherwise it would be necessary for these rooms to remain vacant.

Getting the Definition
We've always wished we'd never said anything about godets, not knowing what they were, but now we learn that they are sometimes used in the hem of the jacket of a tailored suit, so we suppose it's perfectly proper to mention them in mixed company, and we haven't been so relieved since we finally learned that pull-ons are gloves. —Ohio State Journal.

Helped By Taking Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound

Gretna, La.—"After my first child was born I took Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound for a run-down condition. I could not walk across my room at times, I was so weak. A friend induced me to take the Vegetable Compound. Since that time I have also taken Lydia E. Pinkham's Herb Medicine and the Pills for Constipation, and I have used Lydia E. Pinkham's Sanative Wash. I am a housekeeper and I am still taking the Vegetable Compound as a tonic to enable me to do my work."

Thousands of Clocks Must Tick in Unison

The British post office can claim to have the biggest collection of clocks in the kingdom. More than 20,000 timepieces have to be kept perfectly synchronized, although thousands of these are "behind scenes" and are used only for timing junction and trunk telephone calls. Every day at 10:00 a. m. and 1:00 p. m. Greenwich time is telegraphed to chief post offices in England, Scotland, Wales and North Ireland. In point of size the second collection in the kingdom is probably that distributed among the royal palaces. There are 1,000 pieces, of which Windsor castle and Buckingham palace have most. At Sandringham all clocks have been kept half an hour fast ever since the time of King Edward. In the houses of parliament there are about 500 clocks, necessitating a great deal of winding and vigilant synchronization.

Money From Cotton
When James Coats began to make thread in the little town of Ferguslie, Paisley, Scotland, 104 years ago, few could have realized the enormous profits that would accrue to the family. Nine "cotton kings," headed by Lord Gleanar, who left an estate valued at $4,624,203, died millionaires, and the recent death of Mrs. Coats-Boyd, who left $748,118, brings the total to $21,295,274 for ten members of the family. Of this amazing sum amassed from the sale of reels of cotton, the state has claimed $5,104,528 in death duties.—Montreal Family Herald.

His by Deed of Gift
A man who had not been very good during his earthly life died, and went below. As soon as he got to the nether regions, he began to give orders for changing the positions of the furnaces, and started bossing the imps around. One of them reported to Satan how the newcomer was acting.
"Here," said Satan to him, "you act as though you owned this place."
"Certainly," said the man; "my wife gave it to me while I was on earth."
—London Tit-Bits.

MOKENA

Mokena is without a shoe shop again. Saturday was the last day that Henry Leonhardt of Joliet operated the shop which he took over when his father died a year ago.

Mr. Leonhardt is employed as a rural mail carrier out of the Joliet post office and has been operating the shoe shop here in the afternoon and evening. Recently, however, a large number of new patrons were added to Mr. Leonhardt's mail route so that he now has 250 patrons instead of his old route of 110 to serve, which made it necessary for him to give up the local shoe shop.

Mr. Leonhardt has rented the building to Christie Simek who is to open a radio and electrical shop.

Mrs. Elizabeth Cannel who has been very ill for sometime, is not improving.

Auto Accidents Claim Heavy Toll of Life

A total of 27,288 persons were killed in the United States last year by automobiles, according to revised figures of the American Motorists Association, in cooperation with The Automobile Club of Illinois. Of this number 2,165 were autoists killed at railroad grade crossings, figures of the Interstate Commerce Commission show.

Some idea of the toll of human life, taken by automobiles, the Association points out, is gotten by the total killed in the past 10 years, which shows an aggregate of 184,544 dead, compared with 50,604 American soldiers killed in the World War.

"We look upon the fatalities of the war as a horrible and futile carnage of human life. The human sacrifices in the war, however, were no more futile than the mounting toll of dead, partly the result of carelessness, on the part of American autoists," declares St. Mayer, President of The Automobile Club of Illinois and Vice-President of the A. M. A.

"An analysis of the annual U. S. Census reports show that by far the largest number killed by automobiles are pedestrians. In most cities a police investigation is made. Autoists in some cases are charged with carelessness contributing towards the deceased's death, but in the majority of cases the coroner's verdict is that the deceased's own carelessness resulted in his death. The inevitable conclusion is that pedestrians themselves must exercise more personal care."

The total fatalities of motor vehicles in the past ten years is greater than the individual population of Omaha, Birmingham, Syracuse or Richmond.

HIGH SCHOOL PUPILS INCREASE

Figures made public by the United States Bureau of Education indicates a growth in high school attendance that is one of the most striking features in the educational development of the generation. These figures show that, in 1910, the attendance in public high schools was 915,000, but that by 1926 the figure had grown to 3,757,000. It had, in fact, multiplied itself by

PART TIME WORK IN YOUR HOME TOWN FOR RESPONSIBLE PEOPLE

A large Chicago Corporation who are members of the Chicago Association of Commerce and who can furnish the very best banking references, is right now preparing its plans for the Great Chicago World's Fair to be opened in 1933. We need high class people in every city and town within 10 miles of Chicago to represent us during their spare time.

This spare time work is interesting and profitable. Some of our representatives make between $300 and $400 per month, however, applicants must be over 25 years old and have at least a common school education.

Doctors—lawyers—bankers—teachers—merchants—ministers and clerical workers are numbered amongst our successful representatives and we especially hope that people in the above mentioned professions will write us relative to this opportunity.

The Chicago World's Fair will bring millions of dollars and thousands of visitors to Chicago. Fortunes will be made by energetic people. If you want to make some of this money write us at once—state your age and occupation and tell us something about yourself; all letters will be held by us in strict confidence and if we think you can handle our business in your home town, we will write you fully—ADDRESS:

Ich antwortet, "Ja sure!" denken aller while he means a church wo die leute sprechen in whispers. Endlich we go durch an alley zu a barn und Carl geklopt on die door drei mal. Den er yodelled, "O K, Charlie." Das war sehr komisch. Anyhow, die door fliegt offen, und I see das sie haben the stables von the horses rausgeschmissen, das ein bar gebaut. Ach, Himmel, das war grossartig. Well, wir haben some beer, den a schnaps, maybe a pretzel or two, und wieder a schnaps, denn a beer, undsweter, bis meine zehn thaler hat gegangen footsch. Den ich denke auf die mamma, und make my waggich way heim. She was waiting and sagt zu me: "Wo bist du gewesen?" Ich sagt ihr die wahrheit, "Speak Easy!" Das war dynamite. "Speak easy!" Du kommst heim besoffen, und ich soll speak easy? Denken sie noch einmal. Ich will be loud wie hell." Und sie war—und wie.

ORLAND DEALER SHOWS NEW TYPE OF RADIOLAS

Two new Radiolas employing the new AC screen grid tubes and a new power amplifier in a specially designed circuit, were announced yesterday by Mr. Clarence Beagley, authorized dealer of the Radio-victor Corporation of America.

In making the announcement Mr. Beagley said, "Following closely the introduction of the AC screen grid four element Radiotron, after years of painstaking laboratory development, by the Radio-victor Corporation of America, two simplified Radiolas of exceptional efficiency especially designed to bring out the full capabilities of this remarkable Radiotron have just been brought out."

One of these sets, Radiola 44, is a table model, and the other, Radiola 46, is a console with a built-in electro-dynamic loudspeaker. Both receivers are encased in cabinets of two-toned walnut veneer.

"Radiola 44," continued the announcement, "utilizes three UY-224 screen grid tubes, two of which serve as radio frequency amplifiers, and the third as a power detector. The new UX-245 power amplifier tube is used in the single stage of audio amplification. The receiver has three tuned radio frequency circuits, but because of the impedance characteristics of the screen grid tubes, has as much selectivity as a set having four tuned circuits and using the standard three-element tubes. The two UY-224 radio frequency amplifiers, too, give as much amplification as four of the ordinary three-element tubes."

"The screen-grid power detector tube gives such a strong signal that it makes possible the elimination of one stage of audio frequency amplification, thus reducing to a minimum the possibility of distortion, which is sometimes present where successive stages of audio amplification are used. The output energy from the plate of this power detector tube is transferred by means of a choke and filter system to the UX-245 power amplifier tube instead of through a transformer. The elimination of the transformer and the use of the impedance coupling circuit between the power detector and the audio amplifier results in an exceedingly high quality of musical reproduction and brings out particularly well the full, rich tones of the bass register. As an additional precaution to insure undistorted reproduction, the UX-224 power detector tube has a radio frequency filter which prevents any radio frequency disturbance from entering the audio amplifier."

"The UX-245 power Radiotron used as an audio amplifier is capable of delivering a power output equal to that of the UX-210 Radiotron, but operates with a lower plate impedance which results in a greatly improved quality of tone reproduction. As used in Radiola 44, the UX-245 Radiotron will give undistorted volume in excess of the requirements of the average home."

THE STORY

Jim Stanley, wealthy young New York business man, unable to concentrate in his dictation to his desk audiphone, has the machine taken to his home, intending to finish his work there. Rollin Waterman, his business partner and closest friend, comes in. Both men are avowedly in love with Doris Colby. Stanley proposes they toss a coin to determine which of them shall, that evening, first ask her to marry him. Waterman wins. Nina Morgan, Waterman's secretary, also his mistress, has overheard his conversation with Stanley and resents Waterman's plan to desert her. Waterman tells her he is practically penniless and must make a rich marriage. He urges Nina to go to Doris and tell her she (Nina) has been wronged—but by Stanley. The girl consents. Doris admits to her father her interest in both Stanley and Waterman, but is unable to make up her mind which to marry. Nina goes to Doris with her story, securing a promise that Doris will reveal the source of her information. She convinces Doris of Stanley's duplicity, and leaves her broken hearted, and realizing that it is Stanley she really has loved.

It would not be fair to say that Waterman had no compunctions regarding his treatment of Jim Stanley. He had been deceiving him for a long time. Stanley, for example, had no idea that Waterman had been playing the market "on his own," a thing explicitly forbidden to each of them when the partnership was formed. Waterman, having begun a course of dissimulation in this matter, was obliged, or so he thought to keep it up. And as little lies lead to bigger ones, and small disloyalties beget great treasons, so now the tide of deceit on which Waterman had long ago embarked had finally brought him to this crest of treachery. Five years ago he would have been appalled at the mere suggestion of it. Yet, such is the effect of slow but cumulative moral degeneration that now it merely made him uneasy.

And uneasy, increasingly so, he now became as he left the club and turned northward. Nor was this uneasiness at all allayed by his brief colloquy with Nina outside the Colby house. Even after he had been alone with Doris in the Colby drawing-room a quarter of an hour, he still had not the slightest notion as to what had passed between the two women. He had found Doris strange, cold, aloof. He had come there to ask her to marry him, but the moment seemed hardly propitious, despite his agreement with Stanley. Somehow, his suspense must be ended—and quickly. Time was passing—in fifteen minutes more Jim Stanley would be at the door. He must know, and he must know at once. And so he made a plunge. After a long silence, he said abruptly:

"Doris, what's the matter with you?"

Somewhat to his surprise she did not fence.

"I have just heard the most painful thing in the world," she said.

"Now for it!" he thought, and aloud he said, squaring his shoulders to meet the blow, "About whom?"

"About Jim."

The relief that he felt was overwhelming. Guiltily he felt that she must be conscious of it, but almost simultaneously he saw that she was not thinking of him at all, and inwardly he gave three cheers. "About Jim?" he said.

"A certain person has just been here and told me an awful thing about him."

"What?"

"I cannot tell you. I gave my word for honor."

"Surely you don't believe it?"

"I'm afraid I do."

"Was this talebearer some one you know?"

"No, it was some one I never saw or heard of before."

Instinctively Waterman hit upon the sound course to follow.

"But surely, Doris, you don't mean to say that you believe this scandalous tale told by an utter stranger, and about one of your very best friends?"

She feebly shrugged her shoulders.

"But," he went on, "you can't do it! At least you must give Jim a chance to explain—to defend himself."

"Impossible—I gave my word of honor."

"Before you heard it?"

"Yes."

"Why on earth did you do that?"

"Because I took it so lightly. I couldn't imagine that it could possibly be anything of the slightest consequence."

"And it is?"

"Yes, it is. It is a thing that no one but a man with a cruel, cruel heart could do. Oh, he might in the first place have done it upon impulse. That I could forgive. But, after that, nothing but cold, cold cruelty could explain it."

"And you can't tell me what it is?"

"No, I can't tell anyone—I've promised."

"But I cannot understand," said Waterman, warmly, his confidence rising with the overwhelmingly welcome knowledge that he himself was not in danger. "I cannot understand. It seems to me that if anybody, I don't care who he was, came to me with a scandalous story about old Jim, I should refuse to credit it until Jim had had a chance to defend himself—especially if, as you say, his accuser was a person whom I did not know at all."

"I can't go into it," said the girl sadly and abruptly, "but I am certain that if you had heard the story as I heard it, you would have to believe it too, no matter how much it hurt you."

"I don't believe it, whatever it is. Why, we've known Jim all our lives—he's one of the very best."

"So I've always thought," she sighed, "until tonight."

"But not any more?"

"Not any more."

Suddenly she put out her hand to him appealingly like a frightened child. "Oh, Rolly, Rolly," she said, "I've lost my friend. He's gone. I've lost him. And it hurts."

Swiftly he was at her side. His time was come. He took the cold little hand in both of his own, and drew it to his breast.

"Doris, dear," he said, "let me help you."

"You can't. You can't."

"I do so want to help you, because—"

"You see—I love you."

The long lashes rose above the violet eyes, and then they flickered and fell again. Quietly he drew her to her feet, and with a little sob she slipped into his arms.

"Dearest," he murmured, "don't cry—please don't cry."

"But she only murmured brokenly, 'I've lost my friend—I've lost him.'"

"Yes, yes, I know. But I must try and make it up to you if I can."

And thus it happened. Desperately she needed comfort—and the comfort was there. A moment later she freed herself swiftly from his arms.

"Good heavens," she said, "I had quite forgotten. He's coming here this very night. I can't see him—I can't. I must tell Barker to send him away. Please ring the bell—hurry, hurry!"

But Waterman had anticipated this emergency. "On the contrary," he said promptly, "I think it best that you should see him."

"What now? Oh, I couldn't, I couldn't!"

"Yes, now, darling. Think a moment—think. You have lost your friend, you say."

"Yes," she said, "and so have you."

"Yes, we've both lost him, haven't we? And yet we cannot tell him so. How do you propose to treat him?"

"Oh," she said, "I haven't thought—there hasn't been time."

"Well, I suggest that my idea is this: You cannot tell him you are no longer his friend without telling him why, and you can't do that. You must let him find it out by degrees, and I think the easiest way to start will be by telling him that at once that you are going to marry me."

The violet eyes widened abruptly. In truth, the girl was startled. In a moment of keen suffering she had, it was true, gone to the arms of the comforting Waterman. She had laid there some moments. He had caressed her—she had allowed it. Yet it was not until this instant that she realized fully what this had meant to him. All this he saw in the moment of silence that followed his last remark. His fate was in the balance. He knew it. "Dearest," he breathed.

At length she turned away. "All right," she said, "as you wish."

His heart leaped up—he had won! He was safe. Now to clinch it. "Oh, I am sure I am right, darling," he hurried on. "It will be hard to do, but there's one thing about it, once done it will be over and swiftly over. Since you cannot tell him what you know about him and yet you must believe it, you can't go on seeing him day by day, pretending you are still his friend. No one could do it. So let him know that you're engaged to me. If I am not mistaken, that of itself will be a bit of a blow to him."

She sighed as she dabbed at her eyes with her handkerchief. "I suppose you're right," she admitted. "Since it must be, the sooner the better."

"I'm sure of it."

At this moment Stanley entered the room, unannounced, since Barker knew quite well that his mistress was always at home to him. He paused upon the threshold just an instant. Nobody spoke. He feared the worst, but he crossed the room briskly, took the girl's unresisting hand, and said, "Well, my dear Doris, and how are you tonight?"

"I'm very well," she said faintly, without looking at him.

"Good," said he. "Hello, Rolly."

"Hello, Jim."

"I haven't seen you in a long time, not for four or five hours. Very seldom happens like that. Well, Doris, what's the news?"

"No news," she said faintly.

"I've got to contradict you, Doris," interrupted Waterman. "There is news, the best news I've had in a long, long time or ever shall."

"It's delightful that you should have happened in as you did, for I am sure that Doris feels as I do when I say that it makes me quite happy that you should be the first to hear of our engagement."

Jim managed to force a smile. "Splendid," he cried, "splendid! My two very best friends! Doris, my dear friend, my very best wishes—the very best wishes that you could imagine, and then add to those about a thousand more still better ones. And as for you, Rolly, you know perfectly well that I consider you the luckiest man in the wide, wide world."

"Thanks," said Waterman, "I knew I could rely upon you."

"How soon is it to be?"

"We haven't got as far as that," smiled Waterman. "In point of fact it's only just happened."

Jim paused perhaps a second and a half. Within that brief time he made a decision. He suffered—intolerably—with an acuteness of which he had never dreamed. He had an uncontrollable impulse to get away—far, far away, with the swiftness of light. If he could only wish himself at the end of the world, and be there with the wish!

"Well, well," he said, "this is delightful! It will make me especially happy as I go away."

"Away?" queried Waterman.

"Yes, I know, I haven't told you, but for a long time I have had a plan in the back of my head. As you know, I have been one of the backers of a series of archeological explorations that the museum has been carrying on than the presentation of a pie-knife or a mantel clock. There, there—say no more about it. Now I must be off. Good night, Doris." He took her hand again. "I'll see you again before I go, but again let me say how charmed I am. Next to being happy one's self, the most delightful thing in the world is to be assured of the happiness of the two people in that world one loves the most."

"But, my dear Jim, I can't thank you enough—such a princely present!" objected Waterman.

"Nonsense. Why here you are, my two old friends, going to be married—I'd like to do something nice for you—and, well, this is it—that's all. And you know perfectly well I can afford it. I ask only one thing of you in return."

"Whatever it is, it's yours," smiled Waterman.

"In the first place, be happy, but much more than that, make her happy because you see that's about the dearest most important thing in the world."

"You—you'll write, perhaps," asked Doris, feebly.

"Oh, now and then, maybe, and when I come back, Rolly," he added with a smile, "you shall render me an accounting of your stewardship. Good-night, Doris, dear. Good-night, Rolly, old boy." He gripped both their hands again. As he reached the door he turned once more and beamed upon them. "You two dear people," he said, "I love you both and always shall!" With that he was gone.

Waterman turned uncomfortably toward the girl.

"Rolly, oh, Rolly, Rolly," she whispered brokenly, as she slipped again into his arms. "I can't believe it. I can't believe it."

Stanley plunged down the steps as the heavy door closed behind him, and hurried blindly across the Avenue. There was tumult in his brain. He had not expected defeat. Not that he regarded them as in any way superior to those of his friend. On the contrary, in his eyes Waterman was quite the best looking man of his acquaintance, the most winning and the most agreeable. Yet Doris had always been to him everything that was kind and sympathetic and understanding. He had never, it is true, made love to her directly, yet she must have known, he thought, what he thought of her, and being uncommonly intelligent, she must have guessed that before very long he would ask her to be his wife.

He had no suspicion whatever of the truth. By no conceivable means could he possibly have guessed the devious route by which Waterman's success had been achieved. He could not know the sudden shock to which the girl's whole nature had been subjected, nor how much she suffered at the conviction of his turpitude. He could not know that Doris in her suffering had unconsciously, blindly, put out her hand, yearning for comfort, and had taken, almost without knowing it, the only comfort that offered itself.

No suspicion of all this crossed or could cross the mind of the stricken Stanley. His nature was of the simplest and most direct. Life had been too easy for him. Everything had been plain sailing. This was the first great shock of his life and it shook him to the core of his soul.

Resolutely, consciously, he endeavored to put the past behind him. He would burn all his bridges, sink all his boats. Yes, that was the thing. Immediately he burned with the wish to be gone. He waved his hand at a passing taxi whose driver pulled up so sharply that his rear wheels skidded slightly against the curb. Ten minutes later, in his own apartment, he was telephoning:

"Is that you, Wilson?—Yes, yes, I'm lucky to find you in on a Saturday night. Something unexpected has come up. I've got to make many plans of importance with a good deal of speed. Were you planning to leave town over Sunday? No?—You're quite sure? Good, then I shall ask you for once to give up your day of rest and meet me at the office in the morning at eleven o'clock. All right. Good-by."

"Dearest," he murmured, "Don't Cry—Please Don't Cry."

In the interior of Thibet. Nesbitt is starting this week to join the party now in the field, and I'm going with him."

Doris felt that the time had come when she must say something, so she asked: "How long shall you be gone?"

"I've no idea—one year, two years, maybe five. And so I fear that I shall not be present at your wedding. But I plan to have a part in it, none the less. And as your wedding gift from me, my dear fellow, I present you with all my interest, right, title and all that kind of thing, in the business now managed under the style of 'Stanley and Waterman.'"

"My dear Jim!"

"Now don't say no. I'm through with it. I'm sick of the Street. I've had six years of it and I'm tired of the game. You enjoy it. You're good at it. I'm afraid at times the limitations I've imposed upon you have irked you a little. I'm afraid I've been a bit of a drag."

"Not at all," murmured Waterman politely.

"Oh, yes, I have seen that there were many times when you were irritated by my ultra-conservatism. But now all that is passed. The business is yours—lock, stock, and barrel."

"But I say, this is mighty sweet of you!"

"Not at all. An event of this importance, an alliance between my two best friends, requires to be commemorated by something more substantial

Twin Coincidence

Mary and Jane, sisters, were married June 12, 1924, to John and Bill, brothers.

On Christmas day, December 25, 1927, twins, a boy and a girl, were born to Mary and John. On the same day twins, a boy and a girl, were born to Jane and Bill.

The baby boys weighed identically the same, 7½ pounds, each weighing more than his baby sister, while the weight of the girls differed ½ pound.

Ancient Ceremony of Blessing the Waters

The blessing of the waters is a quaint ceremony to be seen in countries where the Greek church exists. It occurs during the first winter season and is attended with great demonstrations and rejoicings.

Extensive preparations are made the day before the ceremony. A route is set apart leading from the church to the spot on the quay that has been selected for the ceremony, a carpet of straw being laid down. In general, the day of the ceremony is a bitterly cold one, but this circumstance does not deter the populace from attending en masse. They arrive on foot and in sledges and are attired in national dress. All horses are gayly caparisoned with worsted favors and tassels and motor cars are similarly decked out.

On the quay a layman is actively engaged in stirring a barrel of water to keep it from freezing. At ten o'clock, heralded by the blare of many brass instruments, the priests leave the church, preceded by a troop of cavalry. With them are borne numbers of religious emblems and banners. The priests chant as they march to the quay, where they go through the special form of blessing the waters of the country.

Renovated Statue of

Queen on Exhibition

There is now to be seen at the Cairo museum in that city the statue of an ancient queen which was recovered in pieces from a quarry where it had been buried. The lady was Queen Hatsheput and her effigy had been removed and thrown into a quarry at the instance of Thothmes III upon the queen's death in 1480 B. C. The excavations near the temple Deir-El-Bahari, at Luxor, have occupied the expedition for years. In 1927 it was confirmed that all the queen's statues in the temple had been ordered destroyed. After the mutilation or destruction the pieces were thrown by Thothmes' retainers into an abandoned quarry nearby. Finally, 35 years ago, when the temple was first cleared, all the debris from it was piled together. The expedition has been employing as many as 700 Egyptian laborers at a time in the task of retrieving the fragments of the buried statues and about 100,000 tons of rubbish have been removed. Fragments of several of these statues have been recovered and are being assembled, but the work is exceedingly tedious.

Table Is Work of Art

Three years of tireless effort have made Burton W. Blair, of Marion, Ohio, the possessor of a library table that is regarded as a work of art. Without the use of a single nail or screw, Burton has made a table that many collectors would like to own. The top is constructed of 1,557 pieces of wood, seventeen kinds being used to give the desired color effect. The table contains three designs, the Masonic square and compass, composed of sixty-two pieces of wood, and the American Legion emblem. Blair is a World War veteran. He began work on his table the day ground was broken for the Harding memorial at Marion, October 5, 1925.

From Some Distance Out

Visitors are allowed on the Hagenbeck farm near Nashua, N. H., and they come in thousands to see the many kinds of animals there. Recently a few penguins arrived from the South Polar regions, and people stood about, staring at them.

"Were those birds raised here?" one woman was overheard to ask.

"Naw," said her companion, disdainful of her ignorance, "They come from out o' town."

Fine Art

William McFee, commenting on a very famous case before the California legislature, said with a smile:

"Liars are born, not made. A good liar is almost as much of a rarity as a strictly honest man and I firmly believe it takes more talent to be a liar than it does to be honest."

"For one thing, a good liar must have a good memory."

Replanting Forests

Reforestation is gradually coming into its own, and during the last three years, 1,055,658 acres have been added to the state and community preserves. The state of Washington led in the increase, with Pennsylvania second. Three states which had not had state forests prior to 1925—Delaware, Georgia and South Carolina—have fallen in line.

The total of public-owned forests now is in excess of 12,000,000 acres.—Washington Star.
